VERNACULARISM ON BAMBOO

Placemaking and Social Experiment is a collaborative program between SAPPK ITB and Melbourne School and Design. The programs offered are typical issues and cases in Indonesia, Bandung and West Java. Then specifically for placemaking, besides studying also traveling. The highlight of our program, firstly, apart from getting them a deeper understanding, unique knowledge related to the local contexts, as well as cultural experience which of is unique once again in tropical contexts, then vernacularism. There is a special skill, namely bamboo material in this program.

SPECIAL TOPIC IN ARCHITECTURAL DESIGN

Placemaking and Social Experiment is a collaborative program between SAPPK ITB and Melbourne School and Design. Students who take part in the program can participate online, just like participants from Melbourne, and later at the end of the semester there will be an offline activity or workshop that we plan to do in Bali. This package is related to two lectures, namely placemaking and social experiment with 2 credits, then the special topic in architectural design with 2 credits, so the total lecture load is 4 credits. There will be an offline activity or workshop that we plan to do in Bali. Our partners from the University of Melbourne, Melbourne School and Design will be fully involved in one class.

PLACEMAKING AND SOCIAL EXPERIMENT TOPIC

Our partner from University of Melbourne, Melbourne School and Design will be fully involved in one class.

The hands on implementation of this program, we will choose an area that is a tourist destination but not too urban, where participants will do a social experiment by mapping the movement of tourist destinations, then they will propose or evaluate the route of the tourist destination. Then also analyze the direction of development of the destination. It aims to examine participants related to the creation of places, placemaking, through social experiments, see the situation directly with the spatiotemporal method and also look for problems and issues by using the knowledge that has been given in class in order to design, improve or evaluate the destination.
